The Poetic Sequence

A Writing Workshop
with Andrea Hollander

9:30 AM - 12:30 PM, Wednesdays
October 29 - December 17, 2014

The Poetic Sequence. We often encounter poetry collections that either contain or consist entirely of a poetic sequence, be they chapbooks, designated sections of full-length books, or entire books themselves. In our own work, more often than we perhaps realize, we create intrinsically linked poems that could be gathered and eventually published as a sequence. Should we set out to create such sequences, and if we do, how might we go about the process? In this workshop for experienced (but not necessarily published) poets, we will examine significant poetic sequences by several contemporary writers and try creating such sequences ourselves.

An award-winning poet and essayist, Andrea Hollander is author of four full-length poetry collections — most recently, Landscape with Female Figure: New and Selected Poems, 1982 - 2012, a finalist for the 2014 Oregon Book Award. She is winner of a Pushcart Prize for prose memoir, the D. H. Lawrence Fellowship, the Runes Poetry Award, an Oregon Literary Fellowship, and two poetry fellowships from the National Endowment for the Arts. Her poems and essays have appeared in many anthologies, college textbooks, and literary journals, and she has been featured at writers' conferences and festivals throughout the United States, as well as in England and France. For twenty-two years Hollander was the Writer-in-Residence at Lyon College, where she was awarded the Lamar Williamson Prize for Excellence in Teaching.
